CAN ACCOMMODATE ALL

With the approach of the opening of the Claresholm Agricultural School it is well to remove any lingering doubts that may have arisen in the minds of those who are considering attending the School, to the effect that Claresholm would not be able to accommodate, as far as room and board is concerned, the large class of students which are expected. We do not know how the matter may stand at Oids and Vermilion but we do know that the class attending the School here will be as large if not larger than that at either of the other two schools and that the townfolk are rallying nobly to assure the accommodation required at reasonable rates. The letting of a room to a student is not considered a social lapse here and no student will be forced to go to the hotels. Further the same discipline that usually pertains to students attending colleges and schools will hold here. No frequenting of hotels and poolrooms will be permitted and reports from the homes where students are domiciled will be asked in order to exercise a wholesome restraint upon the students who are away from their homes, perhaps for the first time. As far as this School is concerned its usefulness will not be seriously nor unnecessarily handicapped nor will its attendance be numerically restricted because of lack of homes for the students.

SUPPLEMENTS SALESMANSHIP

Advertising deserves a field very much less circumscribed than most advertisers imagine. The work of the printed advertisement is not completed by merely making an announcement. The essence of the strength and usefulness of the advertisement lies in repetition. There is a three-fold mission for the regular advertiser: first, to get the advertisement in front of the prospective buyer; second, to suggest a need; third, to induce something to supply the need and it happens in the argument list contention is secured. This is not accomplished in every case by once reading. The power of the suggestion increases by repetition. The reader may at first feel no need of the article referred to in the advertisement. In the case of personal salesmanship, sales are often lost because the seller cannot convincingly follow the prospective buyer. The advertisement does follow the prospective buyer till he has become convinced of the need. Then the printed arguments have been working keeping the particular article which the seller wishes to dispose of before the reader. Again the repetition of the arguments brings to the reader the conviction that not only does he need a similar article but that he needs the particular make or style which the advertisement has been repeatedly advising. The reader is now ripe for the salesman. People who are passing the store every few hours may not be so particular in their perusal of the advertisements but the out-of-town buyer does read and inwardly digest every advertisement in the local paper. To secure the attention the advertisement should not be too small preventing by its limited space the originality of idea which will challenge attention nor on the other hand should it be too big to prevent the reader from taking in at a glance the general nature of the appeal. The true salesman is a general. He overlooks nothing that will influence his prospective buyer. He marshals all his forces, arranges all his details with a view to a successful attack. Horse, foot, artillery, sappers and miners, scouts and aides, are all united for the attack. In this town there are some very capable salesmen but they are not generals. They are trying to accomplish single handed what is difficult enough with the whole force. Advertising is the most useful of all the aids to making sales. Advertising in the local paper is the most valuable kind of advertising at the disposal of the local merchant. It goes where it should go. More people every year are taking the local paper for the sake of the advertising than used to be the case. If you are not carrying on a systematic campaign of advertising you are overlooking your best bet.

STEPS TOWARD SOLVENCY

Several facts stand forth very clearly in connection with the water problem. The system is going behind at the rate of from $100 to $150 a month. In the present state of the town's finances, the continuance of this condition of affairs spells ruin. There are other leaks besides the leaks in the pipe line. There is a steady leak of finances in operating the large plant which was deemed necessary at the beginning to assure the water supply. The water from the Creek as it passes through the defective pipe line, is not above suspicion. The water from the wells on the Hill is good, so any some of those who used it for the years before the Creek was drawn upon for a supply. The pipe line, in any case, will have to be abandoned as the water supply while repairs are being made to it, in case such should be decided upon. We must have an alternative temporary supply during that time. The wells on the Hill will not yield an adequate quantity of water, as they are at present, for the town's needs. Some additional source must be secured. There are other wells in the town which might be available. It is incumbent upon the council to make provision for an alternative, temporary supply right away. When any changes are made to ensure economy those changes must begin at the power house. Of the great expense of operating, the cost of fuel is the outstanding, shining mark for attack. The attempt to draw from the Creek instead of pump up from the Creek is an apparent mistake. No matter what may be the result of negotiations with the Brookbridge county, these other factors in the water system deficit must be acknowledged and some solution found. The suggestion, coming from without the council, we believe, seems upon its face to be the best solution offered yet. It aims to secure from the wells on the Hill as at present, and from some additional source, water enough to supply the town. By the purchase or rent of a small gasoline engine to pump some of the river wells into the public tank, temporary supply could be obtained for the winter. By using the power plant the lights could be operated as usual. Then in time, and this should be as short as finances will permit, a gas engine connected with the natural gas mains may take the place of the boilers for the more economical operation of the electric light system. Then when the pipe line is put in state of repair, a combined gas or gasoline engine and pump might be installed at the Creek and the water forced up to town. This would do away with the interdependence of the two systems, Gas for fuel at the power plant would mean a saving of more than $2,000 and at least $1,000 in wages. This plan, in the opinion, was fathered in the council by C. W. James. It will be refreshing to see a council trying out a possible solution instead of merely talking around the problem. The time for inaction is long passed. This matter has been trifled with for several years and now no time should be allowed to elapse before the initial steps are taken to bring this proposed solution to the test.

CAPITAL AND INCOME.

The Law Makes a Very Clear Distinction

Between Two Things.

What is income? If you bought a house ten years ago for $5,000 and sold it yesterday for $10,000, would the $5,000 profit count as income for 1913?

If you bought 1,000 shares of stock at $10 a share last September and sold them this morning at $110, would the $10,000 profit be a part of your 1913

income? In both instances, the answer must be "no." Income is not a matter of capital, and capital is not in any sense income. One man might have $10,000 in a bank vault and still be not subject to an income tax, because his $10,000 would not be earning a dollar.

Income implies that capital does not income is something earned over a period of time, but the added value to the house was not in any sense earned.

Nor was the increase in the price of the 1,000 shares of stock earned.

Income is a definite and stated return upon labor and upon capital. The value of a house is not income, but the added value to the house is capital.

The value of a stock is not income, but the increase in its value is capital.

If you were to find $10,000 on the street, that would not figure as a part of your income for 1913. If you put that $10,000 in a bank, it would not figure as a part of your income for 1913.

If you put that $10,000 in a bank,

it would not figure as a part of your

LADY NESTER STANHOPE.

Her Eccentric Miss, Who Lived a Strange Life in Syria.

Among the eccentric personages of history Lady Stanhope, who was born in London in 1760, is remarkable. She was the daughter of the Earl of Stanhope and niece of the great William Pitt.

The death of her mother when she was an infant deprived her of the care a young girl should have, and even her education was sadly neglected. When she was about twenty she went to sea as a crew member of the great ship, who was then Prime Minister.

She remained with him till his death in 1804. In the next few years she displayed such singular qualities of head, temper, selfishness and lack of feeling that all her friends were estranged, and the English Government withdrew a pension she had been drawing. In 1810 she shook the dust of England from her feet and started for the east.

She arrived in Syria in 1812 and settled on Mount Lebanon, where she remained the rest of her life, entirely cut off from the companionship of friends and countrymen.

Surrounded by native servants, from her rudeness with capricious impulses, and with indifferent means at her disposal, she had a strange experience. Occasionally some traveler who knew her would make a stop and call upon her. These persons told curious tales of her household. When she was served, one day, she brought the teapot to the table holding it by the handle of the spout. The spilling of her water was speedily by means of the spout. Her bed was a mattress laid on planks that were placed on trellises.

Lady Stanhope was a hard mistress and demanded unheard of hours of service. At one time all the women in her employ left in a body, and her slaves were constantly running away. A strict daily account was kept of a secretary of how every hour of the day of such service and how was employed, and Lady Stanhope kept it for thirty and forty years.

Her time was fully occupied, divided as it was into one hour of sleep, remained in bed until about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and retired at about the same hour the next morning. She began her daily duties at about 6 o'clock.

Her first work was to wash to all the household the outside of their labors for the next day, for no such eccentric hours were allowed at this time. This accomplished, she spent the rest of her time till she retired in looking for trouble in the household, and sometimes sweating, writing letters and talking for hours on any subject upon which she got started.

For a long time she had no one to go to bed she kept most of the household awake and busy, her bell calling them for various services. It might be a summons or a bowl of broth or a cup of camomile tea, for which the gardener was called to gather the herbs or to bring in the chickens, or a tail of an order for the next day, and whoever was to execute it had to be awakened to hear what she had to say.

She kept in good accord with the pasha, to whom she made presents and retained services of various sorts, and often sent gifts to his harem. In this way she had a certain protection. She died as she lived in Syria with no friend or companion to comfort her last hours.

Gingoes English.

The menu is an indispensable adjunct to a respectable luncheon or dinner table in Goyon. As a rule the head servant writes it out, and from his elementary knowledge of English springs a host of quaint blunders. At the same time, his little Oriental bias is over and he adds food-words which are, perhaps, his happiest achievements.

At one lunch there figured, among the dainties, "roast beef," but it caused the hostess some consternation when she discovered the additional legend in very small letters, "roast beef, being a little," the parenthetical note being made to indicate that the beef was accompanied by a sauce of savory odors.

On another occasion there appeared this following acknowledgment of deficiency: "steak and kidney pie, as kidney."

It was altogether delightful to find at one dinner our old friend, which rabbit, appearing as "wrench rubbin." The same genius translated haricot mutton into "hurrygod mutton," "The figure."

Eats' Long Journeys.

Old Maori dwelling on the west coast of the North Island of New Zealand state that when the sea goes to ward the sea in a large body they are led by two individuals of an enormous size. A resident at Levin told Mr. Bruce that he once saw one of these migrations, with two large eels in the van, followed by hundreds of smaller eels, which are characteristic of some eels have been taken in New Zealand. Mr. Bruce has been told by some very old Maori friends that they have known eels to undertake fairly long journeys by night. On one occasion the Maori has camped for the night on a spot that is the spot between the Wanganui and Mangaroa rivers. About midnight their attention was attracted by their eels, which was much excited and was barking furiously. When they went out to ascertain the cause of the disturbance they found that the eels were following up an enormous eel, which was one of the land journey.

Robin and Wren.

The Christmas traditions associated with the wren and robin are recalled by the greeting card issued this season by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds. As the mythical name of the robin "Jenny Wren" is invested with some sanctity attaching to the old legend—"Robin Red and Jenny Wren" God Almighty's cock and hen," as the old rhyme goes. On the other hand, it has been the custom—some obscure pretext, to hunt the wren, as the old rhyme goes. That the wren is the bird is mentioned in the old rhyme is mentioned in the old rhyme.
